The Southwest Virginia Salt Works.
When Southwest Virginia was very thinly settled, the valley in which the saltworks are situated, was not tenanted, or scarcely ever visited. We were told that the whole place was marshy, slimy, and often inundated. The deer, hogs, and cattle would often be found dead there. From its cesspools of filth, and decay and rotten animal and vegetable matter, constantly arose fumes and vapor of a peculiar odor. Hence the place was shunned by the people, and looked upon by the superstitious as a fit place for the appearance of evil spirits. How long these hobgoblin fears, and ghost stories kept dwellers away, we did not learn. At last a hunter by the name of Crabtree, disregarding the current report and belief, that this valley was the habitation of demons and foul spirits, claimed the land as his own. He did not till or improve it in any way. He was fond of hunting, and as deer were abundant in this locality, he spent much of his time in chasing them, ignorant that he had in his possession an immense fortune.

William King observing the strange phenomenon of the vapor that continually rose from the place, suspected that salt might be discovered. So he bought the whole place from its first owner for a rifle and money. He at once set to work to drain the place, and clear it of the bones of the dead animals that lay strewn on every side, and soon caused it to wear a different aspect from what it hitherto had. Then those who had predicted all the evils imaginable to the place, began to see their mistake, and wish for an interest in the soil.

From that time, the works have been constantly increasing in value, as new wells were opened, and the facilities were improved.

The works have passed into and out of many hands since they were first discovered. They are now owned and managed by W. Stock company of which Geo. W. Palmer, W. H. Stuart, and Wyndham Robertson are principal. Many others own small stock.

During the late war, these works furnished all the Southern States, within the Confederate lines, with all the salt they used. If it had not been for them, it would have been difficult, if not impossible, for the South to have been furnished with a supply of salt sufficient to meet the demand. The small number of works that were used before the war proved insufficient, so each State sent agents to manage a sufficient number of furnaces to supply their State with salt. In all they numbered seventy-five.

The railroad was of little service then, so the salt was conveyed for hundreds of miles by means of covered wagons. Often there would be upwards of a thousand wagons waiting their turn to come, when they could get their salt and be away to their homes.

The Federal forces seeing the advantage accruing to the Confederate States from the use of these works, were very anxious to get possession of them. They made several attempts to take them, before they were successful in demolishing the works, and never did hold them during any length of time.

Although but a few years have past since that time, by the use of hammer and saw the place has grown into a new and thriving place from the ashes of the old.

Six furnaces have been rebuilt. They are much larger and better than the old ones. The Company make, on an average, each day about 2,400 bushels of salt. This is thrown in large sheds where it becomes very compact, so hard that it is necessary to dig it out with pick and shovel. As fast as it is packed, it is shipped to market. During our stay (three-fourths of a day) three trains freighted with salt, left the works.—Lynchburg News.

That Unhappy Baby.
I saw it in the cars and I thought it would be dead—or else I should—before the cars stopped and I could charge my seat. I've no doubt it is safely sleeping somewhere under the daisies this very minute. I'm sure I hope so.

It had a fussy mother, poor little soul! and the way it was pulled and hauled and jerked and twisted was fearful to behold. It was a good natured little thing, disposed to be amiable and contented, but no sooner did it get into a comfortable position than it had to be "flopped around into some other position. That fussy young mother just couldn't keep her hands off I do believe.

Baby sucks his thumb—happy infant!—and so he lies back in an easy attitude, stuffs his blessed little digit into his mouth and is happy. But mamma thinks he must be hungry, so she gathers him up in a heap, pulls down the long troublesome clothes, fixes this clock, puts back his silky hairs, and invites his attention to the dinner-bell. Baby is agreed, and settles easily to the new comfort. Not so mamma. Just as the pink lips begin to droop heavily over the blue baby eyes, the winks grow longer and longer, and a delicious drowsiness steals over him, that sharp eye of hers spies something amiss with his nose, and all the maternal fuss rises within her. She hunts up a pin and her handkerchief, and proceeds to annoy and torment him with that weapon till the best-disposed baby can endure a minute longer. He screams in disgust—and I'm glad of it.

Leaving his meal unfinished, she dandles him a few minutes till he stops crying, and then hands him over to papa, in the next seat. Now papa is eating biscuit so of course the unhappy baby must have biscuit. Choking and gasping, he screams again.

Who wouldn't I'd like to know? Then mamma takes him till he is quiet, and lays him down on a shawl, on a seat in front of her. He consoles himself with his thumb again, and is happy once more.

He falls asleep. His thumb slips out of the rosy mouth, and he has forgotten all his troubles. Now surely she will let him alone!

But no, the incorrigible mamma finds that his head is the wrong way, and the shawl that is under him must be over him. So over he goes, and of course wakes up and cries—poor infant!

This time, to quiet him, she lays his face against her shoulder, digging his poor little nose and mouth into her woollen shawl. Of course, he can't breathe, and he screams again, and she slaps him on the back, as though slapping was a quieting process!

He cries harder, and she lays him on his face, on her lap, and pounds him. He stiffens his neck and rebels loudly. Then papa takes him, tosses him up, saying, "Keeber! keeber!" till his sobs come again.

Then mamma hunts in her basket for something to divert him. It proves to be a cookie, which he sucks, and dabs all over his face, of course.

"He enjoys this, and would go to sleep in spite of everything," but his mother is at him again. This time she wets a towel at the water cooler and proceeds to wash off the little tender face with ice water. He screams, and she rubs, as though she were scrubbing a floor, till at last he emerges, clean but red, and in a perfect rage.

(When will mothers learn to wash a baby's soft flesh and not hurt it? No wonder they imbibed such a horror of water and towels!)

Then the cars stopped, and I took up my traveling satchel and went into another car, where the only baby was owned by an older mamma, who has learned to let him alone when he is comfortable, though he stand on his head.

But I could not forget the unhappy sufferer I had deserted, and I wonder the first baby is not always worried into life-long fretfulness.

THE SINGER FAMILY SEWING MA-CHINE—Which is the best Sewing Machine is a point on which every company differs, each, of course, thinking its own the best; but if the point were to be decided by popularity, the Singer would far outstrip all others. The sales of this machine have been enormous,
amounting to more than 180,000 in the year 1872, leaving all rivals far behind. The sales in this city amounted to two hundred and forty during the past year, which is without precedent. It is capable of performing more work and in a more substantial manner than any machine claiming public attention, sewing with equal facility the coarsest and finest material. References furnished of persons who have tested all the different machines, and who pronounce the Singer incomparably the best machine in existence. Call and examine before making a selection. Sold on the lease plan. Machines sent to all parts of the country. C. C. BERRY,
